CODE OF CONDUCT FOR THE TERMINATION OF AN EXCLUSIVE DISTRIBUTION AGREEMENT

The members of the Royal Association of Dutch Wine Merchants have decided to establish the basic principles for the principal and distributor in the event of the termination of an exclusive distribution agreement in the form of a code.

Considerations:

- ❑ The principal and distributor are one another's trading partners with a common interest and each with an individual interest.
- ❑ In the interest of both parties, the exclusive distribution agreement should be set down in as detailed form as possible in writing.
- ❑ Where this does not happen or where the relationship stems from earlier times without or with only a summary written agreement, in conflict situations an appeal must be made to what is customary law in the industry in the Netherlands.
- ❑ In such cases, the code of conduct below is a guideline for the termination of the exclusive distribution agreement, irrespective of whether there is a contractual relationship or merely a gentlemen's agreement.
- ❑ The code of conduct is explicitly not intended for the exceptional case of cancellation on the grounds of an urgent reason within the meaning of the law.

Code of conduct:

In the event of the cancellation of the exclusive distribution agreement by one of the parties, the party in respect of whom the agreement has been cancelled will, in general, suffer damage as a result. In that case, this damage must be limited as much as is possible. Both parties bear responsibility in this regard.

Cancellation must always happen through the giving of a reasonable period of notice. In general, the period of notice is one year. With long-term contracts, that is to say, contracts in effect for more than seven years, this period of notice must be extended by one year for each period of seven years up to a maximum period of notice of three years.

This period of notice may be reduced if the continuation of the agreement would entail damage for one of the two parties. In this case, the party which has the commercial interest in the shorter period of notice must pay suitable compensation to be determined on a proportional basis. If the distributor has made investments in consultation with the principal which can no longer be recouped due to the cancellation, the parties must make a special arrangement in order to recoup or compensate the damage caused in any way.
